

Conservation Study Tours

Increasing environmental knowledge and empowering the next generation Australia and New Zealand

Conservation Volunteers offers students an opportunity to increase their environmental knowledge and experience through our Conservation Study Tours.

On our structured, hands-on program students can visit biodiversity hotspots across Australia and New Zealand, learning about how everything across the planet is connected and the importance of maintaining these vital ecosystems worldwide.

Make a difference as you travel

Highlights

- Encounter animals such as kangaroos, koalas and emus in Australia and kiwis and little penguins in New Zealand
- International work experience through participating in program tasks. Tasks include marine debris collection, tree planting, habitat restoration and wildlife monitoring
- Learn about the impact of current global environmental issues such as climate change, threatened species and marine pollution
- Develop foreign language skills and enjoy new experiences, ideas and cultures
- Explore a variety of themes tailor-made to meet each group and culture's special interests
- Qualified environmental guides, 24-hour escort
- Meet and learn directly from program partners including field experts and management teams of National Parks
- Participate in Australian and New Zealand High school exchange sessions and/or university visits

Conservation Impact

In this program, Conservation Volunteers combines conservation with environmental education and cultural exchange. Offering opportunities to learn about the natural environment, connect with local communities and make valuable contributions to our environments.

Students will gain knowledge and understanding of how they can minimize their environmental footprint and become engaged in real world issues that transcend classroom walls.

We strongly believe preparing our next generation to be good environmental citizens is some of the most important work any of us can do.
